REVIEW

For the half year ended 31 December 2023, the Fund returned 2.6%, while the benchmark returned 1.8%, in SGD terms.

Over the 2nd half of 2023, the Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) levied its final 25 basis points (bps) rate hike to 5.25% - 5.50% for the year during the July 2023 FOMC meeting and opted to pause at the subsequent 4 meetings through the end of 2023. Despite the relatively neutral monetary policy rate stance adopted post July 2023 FOMC meeting, the central bank had continued to signal its “higher for longer” rhetoric, as committee members were of view that a period of below-trend growth and softening of the labour market would be required for inflation to move back to target, while Federal Reserve (Fed) Chair Powell also communicated during press conferences that the FOMC is prepared to raise rates further if appropriate and the committee intends to hold the policy rate at a restrictive level until they are confident of inflation moving down sustainably to their target. Coupled with the firm labour market data, the US Treasury (UST) yields were pressured higher over the 3rd quarter of 2023, with yields on 10-year USTs breaching the psychological 5% handle intraday in early October 2023, before reversing course lower through the rest of the quarter. Through the 2nd half of 2023, market movements were driven by a confluence of catalysts, which transitioned from generally strong data prints seen in the retail sales and Non-Farm Payroll (NFP), stronger than expected Consumer Price Index (CPI), and Israel-Hamas conflict influencing FOMC’s initial firm hawkish tilt, to a rapid turn towards a softer October 2023 NFP print along with downward revisions for the prior two months’ data, as well as cooling CPI prints. This resulted in a shift in FOMC rhetoric, further underscored by vocal hawks such as Governor Waller, whom communicated that the FOMC may be in a position to lower policy rates in the coming months if inflation continues to cool. The Fed pivot was seen during the December 2023 FOMC meeting, which surprised with an incrementally dovish tilt and the status quo decision overshadowed by the dot plot, which had indicated that committee members penciled in at least three 25bps Federal Funds Rate (FFR) cuts in 2024, which is more aggressive than the dot plot presented in the September 2023 meeting, driving the euphoria in the UST market through the end of the year. FOMC’s incrementally dovish inclination is also underpinned by FOMC Chair Powell’s guidance that recent economic indicators are suggestive that growth in economic activity has slowed, where seen together with the moderating CPI print and softening labour markets, lends credence to a Fed pivot. The UST curve steepened, with the 2-year/10-year UST spread yields narrowing from -108bps to -37bps over the course of the 2nd half of 2023.

STRATEGY AND OUTLOOK

Meanwhile Singapore avoided a technical recession, with the 2nd quarter of 2023 Gross Domestic Product (GDP) expanding 0.1% Quarter-over-Quarter (Q-o-Q), weighed by the manufacturing sector, while the ongoing recovering in tourism helped offset weakness in the economy. Monetary Authority of Singapore (MAS) left the width, midpoint, and slope of the Singapore Dollar Nominal Effective Exchange Rate policy band unchanged in the October 2023 Monetary Policy Statement, although investors took away a hint of hawkish lean, as the central bank indicated that a sustained appreciation of the policy band is necessary to dampen imported inflation and curb domestic cost pressures. Towards the end of the year, core inflation proved to be sticky, reversing its previous downward trend as higher travel-related expenses and electricity tariffs fueled the tenacious print ahead of the increase in Government Service Tax (GST) rate and seasonal effects in early 2024. The relatively stickier core CPI as well as GST hike could fuel MAS to err on the conservative end over the medium term, which will now meet 4 times a year, beginning in January 2024, where we remain biased for a status quo decision for the year, even as it looks through the transitory effect of the GST hike. On the economic growth front, Ministry of Trade and Industry (MTI) projects for 2023 full-year to be “around 1.0%”, while the official MTI forecast for 2024 GDP growth resides within the 1.0% - 3.0% range, attributing the recovery in 2024 to a rebalancing of demand from services to goods, alongside a normalization of inventory levels to support a turnaround in global manufacturing activity over the course of 2024, further underpinning the propensity for MAS to be on hold through 2024. Singapore Government Securities (SGS) curve steepened, taking directional cues from USTs, with yields on the 10-year SGS sliding lower by 33bps to 2.71% while yields on 30-year SGS climbed another 31bps to 2.70%.

On the very short end of the curve, the 6-month Singapore Overnight Rate Average slid lower by 42bps to 3.38% while 6-month Secured Overnight Financing Rate climbed 49bps to 5.15% respectively, where both rates drifted lower towards the end of the year, underpinned by the incrementally dovish FOMC central bank rhetoric towards the end of the year. Separately, financials continued to dominate the SGD new issuance space, with European and UK banks tapping the market for Tier 2 subordinated papers, while select local familiar names from the real estate sector, as well as unrated issuers such as Keppel Corp, Thomson Medical, and ST Telemedia entering the market for SGD issuances. The SGD 2-year and 5-year swap rates outperformed the SGS market against the backdrop of the risk on environment, declining by 84bps and 78bps Q-o-Q to 2.81% and 2.56% respectively, mirroring movements on the UST curve. In the SGD corporate bond space, supply remained relatively anemic, which contributed to the favourable technical seen for the market, where the relatively scarce non-financial corporate bond supply continued to perform well, fueled in part by the risk on environment towards the end of the year.

The dovish pivot that markets witnessed in the December 2023 FOMC meeting was illustrative of the reactionary pace that the Fed can have in response to lower inflation materializing over the horizon. While the December 2023 dot plot revealed a median of 75bps rate cuts penciled for the coming year, increasing by one 25bps cut from the September 2023 dot plot, the pace of monetary policy loosening remains misaligned with market's expectation, where FFR futures which have priced in close to 150bps for the year. The divisive expectations can be suggestive of further volatility in the rates market over the interim, as the extent and pace of rate cuts take shape. That said, the stubbornly firm US core inflation seen recently has had the effect of reinforcing FOMC's caution towards monetary policy loosening prematurely over the coming months, where the likelihood of a soft landing that is accompanied with weaker labour market and further moderation in the pace of price pressures to be key signals for the central bank pull the trigger on rate cuts instead, undermining calls for rate cuts in early 2024.

As of 16 January 2024.
